An unpublished block from the Tomb of Huynefer at Saqqara

Dr. Mona Abou El Maati *

Introduction:
Among a series of New kingdom tombs excavated at Saqqara, the tomb of the royal scribe Huynefer. It was first excavated by Prof. Dr. Saied Tawfik during the Cairo University excavations. Excavations were resumed in 2005 by an expedition headed by Prof. Dr. Ola El Aguizy.

This block (pl.1,2) is now preserved in the storehouse of the site. It bears the temporary number 150/2004.

The tomb of Huynefer is situated to the south of the causeway of king Unas’s mortuary complex. It is one among a group of tombs made for the elites and for the high officials from the Ramesside period in Saqqara.

Huynefer was the royal scribe and the holder of the royal seal in the reign of Ramesses II as the king’s name was found written on a piece of stone from the tomb.

Huynefer’s mother was the Smījt “the singer of Amon-Re” and that refer to the high rank of his family.

The block which I study here is bearing a very distinctive scene of offerings, as we can notice a huge amount of offerings and their varieties.

1 I am indebted for the opportunity Dr. Ola gave me to study and publish this block from the tomb.

Description of the block:
The scene on the block shows Huynifer standing on the left, unfortunately his upper part is missing, he is wearing a long pleated dress and sandals\(^4\).

He is holding an incense burner in his left hand. The censer has a long hand to fumigate the offerings placed on three tables of offerings in front of him\(^5\).

These offerings are presented to a god standing on the right, he is probably the god Ptah who was the supreme god of Memphis. Ptah appears standing on the pedestal \textit{Maat}, in his usual mummy like form, his name is missing here, but he was mentioned on another block from the tomb as the god “Ptah–Tatenen”\(^6\).

Traces of colors are found on the block. Two bunches of Papyrus and Lotus flowers separate the first offering table from the other two.

A vertical line of text lies between the offerings and the god, and another two horizontal lines of texts in the lower part of the scene.

For more informations on Ptah-Tatenen see: Ch.Leitz, \textit{LÄGG III}, p.178.
In front of Huynefer’s chest there is a calculation of the offerings:

\[ \text{xAAp'd xAkxAHnot xA} \]

“Thousand of birds, oxen, beer, bread”.

The lower register:

\[ \text{xAllll xAHs xAobHxAsnTr} \]

“Thousand of (…), of vases, of libation, of incense”

At the top above the three offering tables, we can see the lower parts of some offerings such as:

The Seven unguent jars, an ox and a goose:

These sacred seven jars are well known, they were used in the mummification rites and in the rite of opening the mouth, they were also used in the daily services in temples to anoint and perfuming the statue of the god\(^7\).

The first offering table in front of the deceased is full of different kinds of bread, two geese, a vase and there is a lotus flower on the top of these offerings in order to make some refreshment to the offerings\(^8\).

Under the table there are two vases with narrow tops placed on a holder, these vases were used as beer offering vases.\(^9\)

The second offering table is holding bread, two vases and flowers. Under the table we can see two vases with plants rising from them.\(^10\)

The Third offering table is holding twelve loaves of bread, under the table there are two vases “חפ”.

The vertical texts of texts on the right:

\text{//n nfr (m ?) n nTr aA (i)n imy-r xtm Hwy nfr mAa}
\]

“… to the great god (by) the lord of seal Huynefer, the blessed”

---

The horizontal texts in the bottom:

///Spsw xtyw Smsw Hr wn.k sStA Hr wnn nfr aq.k r Styt n kA n///
“…the nobles, who are behind the followers of Horus (may ) you clear the mystery for (i.e vision ) wnn nfr (when) you enter the Styt (tomb) for the soul of…”

Htp di (wsir)
This three signs in the lower part complete the vertical column, they may explain to me the beginning of the vertical column.

The signs of the second horizontal register is unclear, and the writer was not as perfect as in the rest of the texts, there is a change in some signs and there is a change in the colour of the block so it is difficult to read except that they are offerings to the benefit of the royal scribe Huynefer.

Commentary:
- The block is incomplete either the scene or the texts, but we can observe some points as the following:

a- This block contains three lines of reliefs, the upper part we can see the relief of some offerings, the middle part is the main scene as we see the deceased offers to the god, there is also traces of the lower part which obviously were also some offerings.

b- The beginning of the text in front of the god is missing, it begins with: n nfr makes me guess the beginning of it was either the name of the god Ptah as \( \text{ptH} \) \( \text{(w)n nfr} \) or it is the remains of the Htp di wsir spell which begins with “Htp di wsir wn nfr” just as seen in the lower part of the column.

c- The word \( \text{is not clear to me, but I tried to read it by many ways: it may refer with the missing signs from the beginning of the text to the pyramid of Memphis “mn nfr” but this always take the determinative} \( \text{and the determinative of a city not the stepped pyramid.} \) It may be read as “\( \text{m ar} \)” -which I prefer- that gives the meaning “the god in his elevation”, or finally it is a mistake in writing by the writer.

d- The word \( \text{which means “seal” in the title of Huynefer} \) \( \text{imy-r} \) \( \text{xtm} \) \text{“lord of the seal” is written twice, once with} \( \text{in the vertical line and with the sign} \) \( \text{in the horizontal line.} \)

e - The name of Huynefer is written once with the determinative \( \text{and another with the sign of a man sitting on a chair holding the flail in both cases.} \)

f- \( \text{SMSW Hr} \) in the horizontal line means “The followers of Horus”, it refers to the creatures who supposedly followed the god Horus in his predynastic battles at Edfou and in the Delta. They were honored in all Horus temples. The followers of Horus deemed both mythical companions and predynastic rulers of legend, may have been the confederation of nome warriors who followed the Thinite ruler Narmer north in his quest to overcome the Delta and unify Egypt. These followers of Horus were portrayed as bearing clubs and other weapons. In the mortuary texts, the followers assume even more dramatic roles they purify the deceased on their journeys and are described in some documents as predynastic rulers who welcome the dead into their domains of eternal bliss\textsuperscript{11}.\textbf{g-Styt} denotes the sanctuary of a god, especially Soker\textsuperscript{12}, and it can also be used to mean “tomb” so it is sepulchral in implication. Originally it was the name of the sanctuary of Soker at Memphis and it became a general term for the whole necropolis or a sanctuary in one of the main temples\textsuperscript{13}.

\textbf{h-} The vase under the second offering table is a kind of vases represented in Karnak among the annals of Thutmosis III. It is related to the goddess Hathor who is represented in the form of a cow in the middle of the vase with papyrus plants as if she is in the Delta marshes. The vase is known as the didi or ddt vase which was filled with wine\textsuperscript{14}, and was offered to Hathor to calm her down in the Myth of “Destruction of mankind”\textsuperscript{15}.

Conclusion:
As we have seen, the monument under study is a typical New Kingdom with a unique scene of offerings. It is relatively well preserved: the reliefs are beautifully carved and the writing completely accomplished in sunken relief.

It is well observed that there are some mistakes in writing, and omissions are made on purpose in the lower part of the scene.

From the huge amount of offerings with their varieties we deduce how wealthy that person was.
